

IN SEARCH OF WELL-BEING IN LIMINALITY: NO LONGER NOT YET

Nowadays, cities are facing many situations such as climate change, technological transformations, population movements, economic crises, pandemics, and so on. It is an urgent necessity to cope with and adapt to these expected or unexpected situations. This process, in which traditional facts become dysfunctional and classical methods remain insufficient, brings the need to reconsider cities and planning discipline with creative and innovative approaches. Understanding cities and dealing with planning approaches with the interdisciplinary perspective of young researchers become essential in this context.

This conference aims to discuss how 'well-being' can be achieved for the whole society with a comprehensive and holistic perspective under the liminal and uncertain conditions that cities experience.
